Afghan Speaker Educates Dana

Todd Maxwell
Staff Writer

Since the multiple tragedies on September 11, the eyes of America have focused on Afghanistan. Some seek a place to lay blame. Others, like those here at Dana College, seek understanding of the country and culture in the Middle East.

On October 4, dozens of Dana students gave up their lunch hour to hear Abdul Raheem Yaseer, Assistant Director of the Center for Afghanistan Studies at UNO, speak in the Dragon's Head.

Yaseer spoke to dispel many of the myths and misconceptions associated with Islam, Arabs, and the Middle East. He also spoke on behalf of the local Muslim community by condemning the September 11 terrorist attacks.

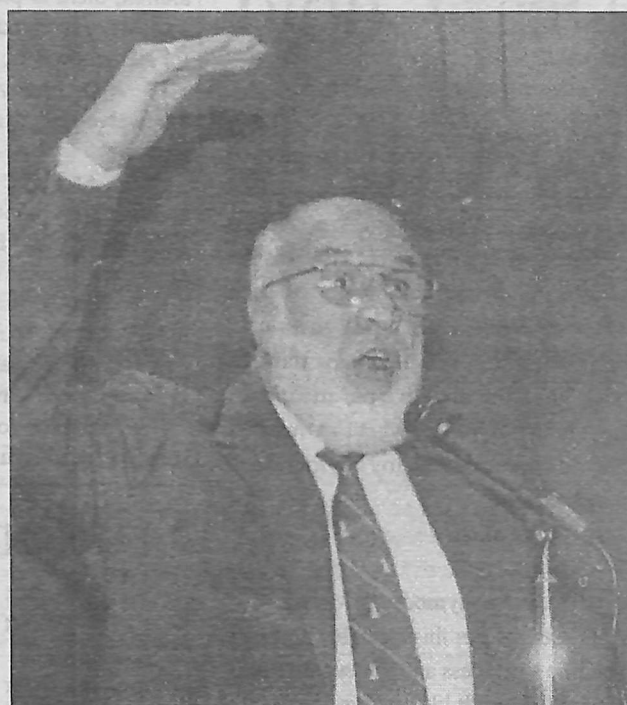

"Muslim terrorist" has become a compound word," Yaseer said, "This is quite unfortunate." He went on to describe Islam as a peaceful religion that teaches tolerance, responsibility and doing good.

"Muslims condemn and hate acts of terror as all peace loving people of the world do," he said. He also said that the people who commit terrorist acts, though they claim to be, are not considered to be true Muslims.

Yaseer gave a brief history of modern Afghanistan. In his words, Afghanistan is a Muslim nation that is "materially backward" but "culturally rich." He talked about the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan from 1979 until the fall of the U.S.S.R. and the struggle for power afterward. According to Yaseer, it was out of this struggle that the Taliban arose.

At the end of his speech, Yaseer became quite emotional in describing his personal love for America. Born in Afghanistan, he became a citizen after moving to America.

"He got really emotional and was very personally involved," said Natalie Hornig, a junior. Other students who attended agreed that Yaseer's talk was informative.

The U.S. Strikes Back

Matt Bloomingdale
Staff Writer

The U.S. and Britain launched its first strikes last Sunday and again on Monday in response to the terrorist acts committed against the U.S. on September 11. At 11:45 p.m. CDT the U.S. began the attack, targeting three Afghanistan cities. Afghanistan's capital Kabul, the city of Jalalabad along the Pakistan border, the Taliban's headquarters in Kandahar and Mazar-e-Sharif in the northern region were the primary targets.

President Bush stated in an address to the nation Sunday that the attacks came after the Taliban's persistent refusal to turn over terrorist leader Osama bin Laden. "More than two weeks ago I gave Taliban leaders a series of clear and specific demands: Close terrorist training camps, hand over leaders of the al-Qaeda network and return all foreign nationals, including American citizens unjustly detained in their country," Bush said. "None of these demands were met, and now the Taliban will pay a price."

The Pentagon revealed that the U.S. and British forces targeted Afghanistan's air defenses, terrorist training camps and strategic military installations connected to the Taliban.

Officials also confirmed that the U.S. and Britain launched cruise missiles from U.S. ships in the Arabian Sea. A British submarine and U.S. aircraft were also involved.

Prime Minister Tony Blair said, "This is a moment of the utmost gravity in the world," in a televised address in London. "Our determination in acting is total. We will not let up or rest until our objectives are met in full," Blair said.

Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Richard Myers said that he is overall pleased with the success of the first strikes.

"We are generally pleased with the early results," said Myers, "(but) we do not believe they got all of the command and control sites."

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld stated that the primary purpose of the attacks was not to remove the Taliban but to remove the terrorists. "Our particular interests are very clear - to root out the terrorists." Rumsfeld went on to say that the U.S. action was targeted only at command and control installations headed by the al-Qaeda and the Taliban.

Rumsfeld also said that this is a long-term campaign and the United States would not be deterred. These

FEATURES

Dear Cupid

Dear Cupid,

When my boyfriend is around, it's like he's the only person that matters to me. He makes me laugh, he treats me like a princess, and I love him. We've been going out for two months. He lives far away, though, and we can only see each other on weekends. During the week, he's the farthest thing from my mind as other guys flirt and give me attention. I can't help but wonder what I'm missing. Should I break up with my boyfriend and play the field?

Anonymous

Dear Anonymous,

Let me get this straight; he treats you like a princess and you want to play the field? Sounds like you've hit the crucial point in a relationship where shy looks and intense dating is over. Things look a little more realistic. What you could be missing is the pursuit part of the game. This is why only those with serious feelings for each other should attempt long-distance relationships. Ask yourself what your true feelings for your boyfriend are, and decide whether or not you'd be willing to let him go for a bout of boredom.

Dear Cupid,

I think my roommate is suicidal. He doesn't talk much anymore, and rarely goes out of our room. I've never seen him smile, and I think I hear him crying at night. When we do talk, he somehow always turns the topic to death. He's obsessed with death. He wears all black, and constantly reads books on death and torture. It's disturbing. Then, last week, I saw one of his wrists had a diagonal scar across it. Should I confront him? Tell someone?

Worried

Dear Worried,

If you think he's suicidal, then you must confront him first, as soon as possible. Many suicides could've been prevented if friends and family had just been aware of the warning signs. If your conversation with him confirms your worries, tell a guidance counselor. Don't be embarrassed. If your roommate gets defensive or angry, just tell him you don't want to see him dead.

Please feel free to write Cupid with relationship questions at:

Student Reactions to Recent U.S. Attacks

Bryant Johnson
Staff Writer

The "War with Terrorism" has been on the minds of Americans ever since the terrorism attacks last month in New York City and the Pentagon. Many Dana students have expressed feelings to end the 'war' through peace talks, especially after this week's attack on Afghanistan's ruling government, the Taliban.

Junior Chenel Sanders thought that the United States should keep the peace and try to negotiate with the Taliban. She also feels that if we can't negotiate for peace, then we should go to war, and if innocent people are killed, then so be it.

Another student, Mitchell Deering, junior, feels that keeping the peace is the only way to stop terrorism, because two wrongs don't make a right. "One war only leads to more war, but if the only way to solve the problem is going to war, then the United States has to attack," he said. On the chance that the United States does go to war and a draft is needed for the fighting, Deering doesn't believe that students will be drafted.

"I am a Bible-believing person," says sophomore Bryan Watson, "and there is a scripture in the Bible that says turn the other cheek; the United States shouldn't go to war."

He also made some comments about the possible draft:

"I don't think that college students or non-college students should be eligible for the draft." He then went on to say, "Why should students or non-students have to train for a war? A man shouldn't have to leave his education or job behind just to fight a war."

strikes are part of a much larger effort against worldwide terrorism, one that will be sustained and is wide-ranging. "It will likely be sustained for a period of years, not weeks or months," said Rumsfeld. "We will not stop until the terrorist networks are destroyed."

To keep refugees from fleeing to Pakistan borders, the U.S. followed the military attacks with a second humanitarian airdrop. The airdrop consisted of food, clothing and medicine for Afghans who have been suffering under the Taliban rule.

Dana's Student Senate

Ginger Krueger
Staff Writer

Construction on the Dana cafeteria should be completed by the week after fall break, the Student Senate was told at its Sunday night meeting.

With the new cafeteria up and running, the quality of the food should improve, and probably the attitudes of students, as well.

In other matters concerning the cafeteria, the Student Concern committee brought up the fact that the hours advertised for the cafeteria and the hours it was supposed to be available according to each meal plan ("Gold—7 a.m. to 7 p.m.; "Silver—11 a.m. to 7 p.m.) do not coincide. These were not the hours contracted with Sodexo Marriott, and it was decided that the Business Office will address the problem.

Two campus groups had their budgets approved. The Young Democrats presented a budget for $1400, and the Residence Hall Association submitted a figure of $1218.85.

Maintenance also presented a request for money: to provide soap in the soap dispensers in the residence halls. Although maintenance was originally supposed to pay for the soap if the Senate provided the dispensers, this was overlooked in favor of keeping the soap available in the halls. A motion was passed to give $590 to maintenance.

The problem of individuals smoking near the entrances of buildings was addressed. Also, members of the Senate will be talking with maintenance regarding ticketing and repainting the parking lines and crosswalks.

There is an Eco-Conference taking place in Washington D.C. over fall break. Any Senate member interested should speak with Cheston Field. Congratulations went out to Steph Collins for being elected secretary of the Honors Program.

The next meeting will be held at 7:30 on October 21, 2001 in the Forum, which is located in the Durham Center.

OPINION

Gossip Plagues Dana

Lynsie Cetto
Staff Writer

Oh my, did you hear...? Do you know who went...? Friday night ...? Everyone on this campus (including yours truly) partakes in gossip. There are several reasons gossip is so prevalent on our campus.

Part of the reason gossip occurs is simply that there is a thrill in knowing something "secret" and a sort of excitement surrounds sharing that information with just a few of your closest friends. This thrill leads people to share personal information about people who may not otherwise want that information shared. Or, the information may only be part of the truth and may shape the receiver's view of the truth, based on partial information.

Although knowing juicy information about the person who sits next to you in class has its real benefits, the fact that our campus is so small is part of the gossip problem. Chances are, if someone mentions a name, you know who that person is or at least have a general concept of things about that person. This leads to stereotyping different groups on campus, like the wrestlers who drink a lot, or the softball players who all like to go dancing on Thursday nights. These things may be true to a degree but cannot speak directly of every member of those teams. Yet as stories circulate about the weekend, the overall concepts find a way to attach themselves to members of those groups.

The problem with gossip on campus goes deeper than just stereotyping fellow classmates. Sometimes it seems as if no one can mind his or her own business. A lot of Dana students are here for the smaller size but realize soon after arriving not much is not of public interest. For students coming from larger high schools, the adjustment can be tough, questions like why should anyone care, or why do people have to put in their opinions— can't everyone just shut up and let me live my life? These become common thoughts that can form an unforgiving and unwelcoming environment for many students. Also, the gossip typically goes on long after the event happened, so scorn and teasing can ensue for a very long time after a single mistake or event. That can be pretty intimidating for some students, and may result in their not wanting to go out or partake in activities around campus.

Sometimes gossip about a person changes how that person is treated. I once heard a sermon on this subject that I felt would be appropriate to share:

A woman named Sue had lived in a house her entire life. When Sue was beginning her adulthood, a new couple moved in to the house next to her. As time passed, Sue noticed the couple rarely left the house and the woman of the house was never seen. There were also some strange packages being delivered to the house, and once a week a black car came and picked up some parcels.

Eventually, Sue decided that the couple was involved in some sort of illegal operation but feared to tell authorities. Instead, Sue let her neighbors and her women's club know by letting details slip. Soon this couple became the talk of the town.

One night, the sheriff, having heard all these rumors, decided to go check things out. At 11 p.m. he and a few squad cars pulled into the couple's driveway and they approached the door. A few hours later, the sheriff and his men returned outside and they were chuckling. The couple wasn't involved in illegal activity: they simply were helping a Santa Claus effort by responding to children's letters to Santa and helping distribute presents to needy kids. Since the couple was retired, they had just wanted to do something nice for other people, and no one had asked them to attend any social functions.

Sue immediately felt horrible and went over to apologize. The couple turned out to be quite nice, and they explained to Sue that they simply didn't understand why people in the town had been so cold towards them. Sue promised to set things right, and she went straight to her church to confess her sins and see what could be done.

Sue was told by her minister to make a list of all the wrong or misleading things she had ever said about the couple, and she was then to take that list and rip corners of it off and place the pieces of the list all over town. Sue happily started out on the task and was finished by nightfall. In the morning, she rose and went to speak again with her minister. Her minister said she was to go collect all the pieces that she had distributed around town the day before. Sue set out and was disappointed when she found only three little pieces of her list. She searched and searched until nightfall. She returned to church disappointed that she had failed such a simple task.

The minister sat Sue down and explained that those pieces were like all of the rumors she had started: once the words were said, it was nearly impossible to undo the harm that they had caused. Rumors spread, and you can never go back and tell everyone once you find out you were incorrect.

Sue went home with a heavy heart and devised a plan to invite the couple over for a dinner and have a bunch of guests so she could tell a large amount of people the truth at once. Yet Sue knew that all those years off gossip wouldn't be undone. So Sue also decided that whenever she was tempted to gossip, she would write the detail on a slip of paper and put it in her pocket and keep it there until the day passed. That way she would keep herself from harming the reputation of any more innocent people.

I think that Sue is like all of us. We are all willing to jump to conclusions and assume things about people based on a little information, or on what others have told us. From now on, though, I am going to try to keep my gossip ideas in my pocket so that I don't contribute to something that could be nothing but a misconception.

CD Review: Garbage

beautiful garbage

[Interscope]

October 3

On this, their third album, Garbage achieves the depth and variety their first two discs lacked. On this aptly titled release Garbage explore their more introspective side. Shirley Manson lays aside some of her feminist angst to reveal her (can you believe it) softer side. But don't be fooled, smooth edges are still edges. Still attached to their distinct alt-rock sound, they lean a bit more to the side of alternative dance with nods to modern R&B (Androgyny, So Like a Rose) and vintage hard-rock (Silence is Golden, Parade). Letting some pop-sensibilities take more control of their raucous tendencies leads to an enticing and smooth sound without losing the energy and excitement Garbage have established for themselves. The candy coating is a layered a bit thicker this time around, not that the listener won't enjoy it. Compared to their previous albums, this newest one shows the band's increasing maturity as musicians and as individuals.

Dana Homecoming Tips

Lindsey Fox
Staff Writer

If you are a freshman, I would suggest taking two minutes out of your busy schedule to read this article.

Okay, I am just warning you. Homecoming here at Dana is probably a little different from what it was at your high school.

First things first. Girls, it would be a good idea to hold off on going to the Westroads and buying that $150 dress. If you are craving to stand out at the dance, it would be wise to go and get yourself a cool, hip pair of pants and a sparkly little tee shirt.

No one really gets too dressed up for the event.

Of course, there is going to be at least five girls in a brand new prom dress from Van Mour. If you are one of them, yes, you will get looked at and I hope your money was well worth the event itself.

Boys, same thing. Go and get yourself a collared shirt and maybe iron your jeans. I don't think the girls are going to find you as attractive in a tux as you would them in a skintight, elegant dress covered in beautiful rhinestones.

If you're planning to go to the extreme for homecoming and make it a date, take your crush somewhere simple like Goodrich. There is nothing more romantic than going face to face while sharing a milkshake.

I hope I haven't ruined your plans for the entire evening. But freshmen, I just thought it would be fair to give you a helpful heads up.

Dana Women Clinch GPAC Conference Soccer Title

Matt Hanna
Staff Writer

Dana Coach Todd Wick's Lady Vikings clinched the GPAC Conference Championship with a dominating 3-1 victory over preseason favorite Hastings College about one week ago.

The Lady Vikings have been consistently dominant all season, giving up only 5 goals while scoring 63 through 15 games this season.

The Lady Vikes started their most recent game versus Manhattan Christian with a bang as Renee Bowman scored early, setting the tone for the game. At halftime the score was 1-0, but was not indicative of the game as Dana kept the ball on the Manhattan Christian side of the field. Nasty 17 mph winds seemed to hinder the Viking scoring attack.

Tanya Dugan scored her first of three goals early in the second half, but the remainder of the scoring came late in the second half with goals from Nicole Tenski, as well as Dugan's second and third goals.

The Lady Vikings have 5 games remaining as they continue to tune up for conference playoffs. The first four games are all home games while for the final regular season contest the Lady Vikes will travel to Northwestern.

Vikings Will Face Midland Next

Jason Dannelly
Staff Writer

The oldest coaching cliché might be that homecoming week is just another game, but this year is a bit different for the Dana Vikings.

Not only do the Vikings expect plenty of attention from Dana College alumni, but they also expect even more from the Midland Warriors.

This Saturday, the two rivals will battle at Viking Field in a late kickoff at 2 p.m.

Coming into this week's game with Midland, the Warriors hold a 40-13-1 advantage over Dana in the series.

The Vikings ride some confidence into Homecoming after their offense outscored Sioux Falls in the second half 21-17 in a 52-31 road loss.

The Viking offense will be anchored again by sophomore quarterback Chuck Wright, receivers Kevin Stull and Jackie McCall, and newly found running backs Zane Christensen and Jon Carlo.

The defense still boasts two individual conference leaders in tackles, linebackers Luke Smith and Kurt Ferguson.

Dana is 1-5, 0-5 in the GPAC. Midland is 3-3, 1-3 in the GPAC.

Dana Falls to Univ. of Sioux Falls

Marshall Marquardt
Staff Writer

Not even a second-half offensive explosion could help Dana earn its first conference football victory of the season last Saturday. The Vikings outscored the host University of Sioux Falls 21-17 in the second half but still fell short in the end, losing 52-31.

Dana hopes to ride this scoring confidence into its Homecoming game Saturday with Midland Lutheran.

"I was happy that our players continued to play," head coach Jim Krueger said.

But the Vikings' league-leading pass offense, which averages 271 yards, couldn't win the game on its own. Freshman wide receiver Jackie McCall led Dana with 11 receptions, and senior Kevin Stull was close behind with 10 catches. Stull needs only 18 more receptions to break former Viking Brent Leefers' career record of 145.

"Hopefully by mid-season, the younger players will step up and start making plays," Krueger said.

"Stepping up" is exactly what freshman running back Joe Sweeney did on the punt defense team. Sweeney blocked a punt that set up a Viking score. While the Vikings lead the conference in pass offense, they are last in rushing yards.

Saturday's Homecoming game against Midland Lutheran will match up the conference's top-ranked pass defense against Dana's prolific pass-oriented offense.

"I'm excited from a coaching stand point because we are finally playing a conference rival that is not a top twenty team," Krueger said.

Midland Lutheran is ranked last in the league in total offense, while Dana is ranked sixth. Dana has allowed only eight sacks this season, but the Warriors are league-leaders in sacks.

Dana linebacker Luke Smith ranks second in the conference with 75 total tackles and stands third in quarterback sacks. Fans are encouraged to get to the football field early to get a good seat—officials expect a large Homecoming crowd.
